

Melbourne's Railway Hotel divvies up its generous interior into railway-themed barroom, bistro, and a more formal dining area, curtained off by a fishtank. The opposite of fussy, take your pick from the huge, wall-length blackboard menu and grab yourself a seat anywhere. For every ounce of surprise you express when you encounter the range and quality of the predominantly Italian cuisine on offer at this Fitzroy North local, you'll find two ounces given back to you in the form of knowing smiles – locals have been flocking to The Railway for years for dishes like Osso Bucco, penne Siciliana, veal parmigiana, and salads made from greens gleaned from the neighbours gardens!

This fact exemplifies the role Railway Hotel plays in the community. Established in 1972 by Peter and Miriam Negrelli, the two have taken care to keep their pub a truly communal space, with regulars gathering in the dining room where the famous menu hangs and, when the weekend rolls around, spilling out into the pool room and the parlour. Lest we forget the beer garden. Out here, shade is provided by well-established vines winding around pergolas – the perfect hidden spot in Fitzroy North for a beer on summery days.

Gigs abound, with The Railway playing host to Melbourne bands like the Surprise Partie, Fame Trivia, and the Railway Gang. It's thanks to proprietors Peter and Miriam that The Railway is such a staunch supporter of diverse musical talent, and that there's such good food on offer.

Find The Railway – not on a corner – down Nicholson Street, on the block between Park and Liverpool.
